Hair Growth

Discover how Chinese herbal medicine can help.

The Sun Herbal range of concentrated Chinese herbal formulas can promote healthy hair growth and general vitality.

Our Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) brands include:

Why healthy hair is important

According to traditional Chinese medicine (TCM), the quantity of your hair and also the quality is a direct reflection of your general health. Hair strength, rate of growth, and thickness all depend on the condition of the internal organs and vital substances.

Many people suffer from various hair complaints, such as hair loss, dry hair, thinning hair, dull hair, premature graying, and receding hairlines. All of these problems can be directly related to the health of the major bodily organ systems, in particular the Liver and Kidney, as understood in TCM.

As we age, the normal functions of these organ systems start to decline. This causes the hair to become thinner, more brittle, lose its color, and recede or fall out. Some people age faster than others, either due to a congenital weakness or because of lifestyle factors, such as overwork and insufficient rest.

How does it work?

In order to combat the effects of ageing and to restore the hair to a healthy lustrous condition, traditional Chinese medicine makes use of herbal combinations that promote the function of the Liver and Kidney as well as enrich the blood and improve blood flow to the scalp.

These herbal formulations also have a general rejuvenating action and can make the hair become strong and healthy. Hair growth will become more rapid and, over time, hair loss and premature graying can be minimized.

Ancient Chinese miracle herb for HAIR

A renowned Chinese herb for hair growth is the root of Fallopia Multiflora (he shou wu in Chinese, which means, 'Mr. He's black hair'). It is one of the main traditional medicines used to promote healthy hair growth and keep it from turning gray. It also has a profound tonic action on the whole body.

There are several different versions of the story about old Mr. He, who was a loner with poor health and prematurely graying hair. He longed to lead a normal life and carry on the family lineage. On waking one morning, he noticed that a large and healthy specimen of this herb was growing close to his home. He dug up the root, dried it in the sun and started taking it daily as a medicine. Over subsequent months his mind became clear, his body regained strength and his hair turned from gray to black. He soon married and was able to have many children, including several sons, all the while continuing to take this wonderful herb. He lived to the ripe old age of 160, and his descendants who also took this herb lived to an advanced age and had large families.

Other important tonic herbs from the Chinese pharmacopoeia that are able to promote hair growth include Ginseng, Eclipta, Ligustrum and Psoralea.

Can Chinese medicine help my particular condition?

When prescribed by a qualified healthcare practitioner, Chinese herbal medicine can assist with:

- Premature greying of the hair
- Thinning hair
- Receding hair-line
- Bald patches

In general, the effects of Chinese tonic preparations work quite rapidly in relatively younger persons (35 to 45 years), and less rapidly in older people (45-65 years); while in the elderly (over 65 years), they work slowly but surely. In addition, the severity of the person's condition also determines how long the herbal medicines need to be taken: shorter periods for less severe and longer for more severe. Generally it is best to be assessed by a suitably qualified healthcare practitioner, who will be able to give you an estimate of the sort of outcomes that can be expected and also in what timeframe these will occur.
